

Ride the wave of English-Mediated Instruction

As the global phenomenon of English-mediated instruction (EMI) continues to experience unprecedented growth, universities must navigate a sea of change, often while treading uncertain waters. Two institutions driving innovation in this highly sought-after field – the University of California, Irvine (UCI) and Ca' Foscari University of Venice – have joined forces to help professors master English as a medium of instruction and lead their schools into the future of EMI.

/Ride the Wave of English-Mediated Instruction/, a four-week intensive course in Venice, Italy, combines UCI's cutting-edge curriculum with a uniquely inspiring Venetian cultural experience. In 97 hours of instruction, participants will improve their core competency in English while improving instruction techniques through pedagogical training workshops and observations. A certificate will be conferred upon successful completion of the coursework, teaching practice, and other activities included in the program.

Learn the tools and techniques to effectively teach your academic field in English, all while experiencing Venice's rich cultural heritage. Read more information about this one-of-a-kind program in the flyer attached.

Ready to dive in to EMI this winter? We can't wait to see you there!

For further information please see www.unive.it/irvinechallenge
<<http://www.unive.it/irvinechallenge>> or write to corsi.challengeschool@unive.it
<<mailto:corsi.challengeschool@unive.it>>.

Kind regards,

Valentina Vecchi